comments: I thoroughly agree with the 'Victory City' concept. It preserves land such as green spaces for parklands as well as land for agriculture. The transportation system is ideal, as most errands to stores are for less than 6 items. In Victory City there will be no need to drive in heavy traffic to suburban malls in a air polluting van to shop. Walking will be encouraged as amenities will be close to residences and businesses.

As a paraplegic I would find this setup ideal. Presently I live in a condo within strolling distances of stores, and cultural attractions. As our city is of hilly terrain I use a power chair to get about town. I drive only to go to another city.

In Victory City, there will be no need to be concerned over inclement weather.

I have served on planning boards and have always been opposed by real estate developers, and auto related industries. I am pleased to find that there are others who agree with my ideas. I am also a Futurist and write articles focusing on mass transport and urban planning.

Thanks, I will bookmark this web site.
