Dear Mr. Simpson:

This will acknowledge, with thanks, your recent letter with respect to an idea which you have indicated would be of interest to us.

We would normally respond to individual letters on a more personal basis because of the sincerity and good intentions evidenced in the many communications. We have found it necessary, however, to resort to the use of a form letter, because of the great number of interested persons who have written to us.

Although new and useful ideas are indispensable to us, those who make such suggestions would generally have no way of knowing which, if not all of the many suggestions received, have been made previously by, or are already familiar to, our staff of professional persons. This staff devotes its full time and energies to the creation, planning and development of new projects. Consequently, to avoid embarrassment and misunderstanding, there has been adopted the strict policy of declining to consider unsolicited materials, suggestions and ideas. This is the same policy we have followed with respect to Disneyland and our other activities for many years.

We hope that you will understand our position, which past experience has shown to be for our mutual benefit. Accordingly, we are returning your letter to you without consideration on our part. We are also returning to you, unexamined, any material which had been enclosed therewith, but with our thanks for your interest in writing to us.

Sincerely yours,
